QUARANTINABLE DISEASES

In describing the management of quarantinable diseases, as scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, etc., in the several sections of North Carolina in the past, chaos is the word. In only two or three counties of the state, except the counties having health officers, has there been any effort at control worthy the name.

With the population increasing, compulsory school law, and increasing attendance in the schools together with lengthening school term, it is an imperative necessity that there be systematic control of quarantine. The danger of a child before having measles, scarlet fever, whooping cough, or other so-called diseases of childhood, the better its chances for recovery without complication.

FOOTBALL SATURDAY

Interest in the south Saturday will center in the Virginia-Vanderbilt and Washington and Lee-Georgia Tech football game, as these promise most excitement. On form, Vanderbilt should win by a couple of touchdowns, maybe three, and Washington and Lee, whose team ought to be three touchdowns stronger than the Georgians, should have little trouble in winning. Carolina will play V. M. I. at Chapel Hill, and this should be an easy win for the Tar Heels.

"His Thirtieth Machine" Columbia State.

"On October 8 Boelke brought down his thirtieth machine." Just a line it is in a brief dispatch about the reported wounding of an aviator, but what a world of adventure, of thrill, is locked up in that sentence! Thirty times in action, far above lines, with the planes' machine guns "putt-putting" and the anti-aircraft guns barking their long wolf- howls from their dugouts of their armored combats, imagine the variety of deadly circumstances that have entered into the encounter.

With a good flying day, say, the aviator—in this instance the intrepid Capt. Boelke of the German aviation corps—takes out his Fokker as the mists are dying in the sun. The wind is hardly noticeable, the air is solid, without those tricky holes which have sent so many a gallant fellow to his death. Up, first rising straight and then circling, the swift Fokker bears its way toward the allied lines. Over the "no man's land" between the trenches it hovers briefly, and then heads toward the source whence have come the showers of big shells against the Zoller redoubt or the Schwaben or any one of those posts which have made the German lines so powerful.

As it speeds on its way the pilot sees the enemy planes rising to meet it, while the smoke rings from the Archies' shrapnel bid him a grim welcome. Now an enemy plane comes swooping toward him, its machine gun sputtering as it comes within range. Then the rapid fire snaps their messages of spite and the steady bark of the anti-aircraft guns sounds from the lines below.

"Nose diving"—plunging straight toward the foe—or sweeping round him in rapid circles and ridding him with bullets, the Fokker careers wildly. The result is doubtful, hanging on the knees of the Mercury, the patron saint of the aviators. Then comes what baseball men call the "break." A shot finds a wire of the enemy plane, or taps the petrol tank, or wings the pilot. There is a sharp lurch by the British plane, perhaps a burst of flame as the petrol takes fire, perhaps the collapse of a wing, and the machine hurtles or glides to the earth.

For five, ten or fifteen minutes the daring Teuton has pitted his skill against that of a skillful rival—and in the deadly game he has won. His reconnaissance may or may not be successful, but his triumph over the element and over his human foe is complete. Back he goes to the German lines, to get a line in the official communiqué—"Capt. Boelke brought down his thirtieth machine today."

And that is only one of his encounters. Repeat the process for the 30 machines he has brought down, add to that number the uncounted times when neither machine has fallen, and there is a sum of everyday heroism for one man that would be astounding had not the spirit of the soldier ever showed itself superior to every terror of earth and water and air and gunpowder. Multiply his experience by the thousand and one can gather some idea of the vastness of the air warfare which is constantly waged over the battle scarred earth of France and Belgium. If ever courage was dominant over everything, it is here.

Sons of Peers Fallen

New York Sun.

Fifty-five sons of British peers have fallen on the battlefield of the European war. One of the latest was Lieut. Windham Tennant, 19, eldest son of Lord Glenconner, who was killed in France September 22. Only a few days before the death in action of his cousin, Lieut. Mark Tennant, was reported.

Lieut. Wyndham Tennant had been with the army just over a year, having joined as soon as he reached the legal age. In a letter to his mother, dated just before going into action, he wrote:

"This is written in case anything happens to me, for I should like you to have just a little message from my own hand. Your love for me and my love for you have made my whole life one of the happiest there has ever been. This is a great day for me. 'High Heart, high speech, high deed'—mid honoring eyes. God bless you and give you peace."

Four cabinet ministers, Mr. Asquith, Lord Lansdowne, Pike Fease and Arthur Henderson, have lost sons in the war, and Lord Crewe a son-in-law. Mr. Henderson is the Labor party leader, and his son was a captain. Lieut. Raymond Asquith gave promise of holding as high a place at the bar as his father. He had an appointment on the staff, but insisted on serving in the fighting line. Mr. Asquith's youngest son was wounded at the Dardanelles. Lloyd George has two sons in the army.

AMERICAN ARCHITECTS INVITED TO COMPETE
